Hemp builder Steve Allin talks about farm & family, rock 'n' roll, the industry's future and his latest projects: Rebuilding with hemp after earthquakes in Haiti and Nepal.

HT: What did you find when you got there?

SA: I knew nothing about Haiti then and so was largely unprepared for what would experience. When Riva insisted it was as part of the research for a project she was proposing to the Florida governor.

LearnTechSUDA Special Edition

HT: What are the goals of the project?
SA: Our project is based on the concept of outfitting a mobile school centered around the growing and processing of hemp – initially to build skills, and then to develop other materials such as fiber and food once

HT: What are the logistical challenges in this situation?

SA: This idea will have to be well thought out as the winds in the north of

A Builder with Soul

Wolf Jordan is one of Europe's leading experts in the production of high quality natural plasters and renders for the eco-construction industry. He is the founder and sole owner of Wolf Jordan & Co., which also produces binder formulas for hempcrete construction, and natural oils and waxes for wood and stone. Wolf is an old-world craftsman with more than 30 years' experience, a devoted educator and innovator who has worked on natural building projects all over the world.

Hemp Today: What would you say are the most pressing challenges for hemp building in Europe? What would you say are the biggest opportunities for natural and hemp building movements?

Wolf Jordan: Europe is very rich with its green 'Consciousness' in the 1970s. This was Europe with its first real big commercial building in the 1970s. But in the 1980s, the building industry was still very much in the shadow of a shadow, which was missing of a breakthrough. But, after all, Europe has a great International Hemp Building Association, and also many 'Building with Hemp' all the around here for years. The reason to work with hemp and lime. He moved the 'Building with Hemp' concept to the rest of the world. There's a big, an enormous important job awaiting you in the world about hemp, but also the hemp too.
